The most ordinary ritual of pooja is to trace before the house in a customary way using the white lime powder. This ritual is followed early in the morning after bathing by the woman of the house.

The Third Day

The 3rd day of festive carnival is known as Mattu Pongal which is meant to be the day for cows. Cows are worshipped after adorn with multi colored bells, swag of flowers, tinkling bells and sheaves of corn. After feeding cows with Pongal, they are taken to villages. Reverberating sound of their bells attracts the villagers and the men arrange a race within cattle's. In order to wave off the evil eye, Aarti is carried out on cows. Due to joy among people, the atmosphere will also be filled with fun and happiness.

The Fourth Day

The final day of festival is known as Knau or Kannum Pongal Day. A turmeric leaf is washed correctly and is then placed on the ground. The relics of sweet and Venn Pongal, normal rice, colored rice, plantains, betel leaves, betel nuts and two pieces of sugarcane are placed on that leaf by the woman of the house before bathing. All the leady of house gather in the bailey of their house. In the middle of leaf, rice is placed and prays for their brother's family to flourish. With turmeric water, rice and limestone, Aarti is carried out for brothers. And this water is sprayed on the Kolam in front of the house.

Legend behind celebrating Pongal

As per the legend, Lord Shiva sent his bull, Nandi to the earth in order to ask the mortal to have a daily oil massage and bath and to have a serving of food once in a month. But Nandi promulgate that everyone have an oil bath once in a month and a daily meal. This enrages Lord Shiva and he accurst Nandi to live on the earth forever. Tillage of fields and helping people in the manufacture of more food will be his tasks. Hence, this day is related to the livestock and harvest of crops for new yield.

Historical Viewpoint on Pongal

Pongal is mainly celebrated in southern states of India specially Tamils. It was exposed as Dravidian harvest festival in the Sangam Age in between 200 B.C. to 300 A.D. and this is also mention in Sanskrit Scriptures.

In Sangam era, maidens observed Pavai Nonbu which was very popular during the empire of Pallavas. It was celebrated during Margazhi, a Tamil month. On this day, girls implore for rain and shower of affluence on our country. Whole month, they maintain a distance with milk and its products. They don't even oil their hair and self-control themselves from using the harsh words while converse. Bathing early was also a ritual. They carve the idol of Goddess Katyayani using wet sand and then worship it. They end this penance on the first day of Tamil month Thai. Due to these Institution and traditions, pristine age gave arise to Pongal.
